

If you're sending a text message, you're generally sending an "SMS," which stands for Short Message Service. It's the oldest and one of the most widely used text messaging services today. It includes MMS (Multimedia Messaging Service), which enables SMS users to send multimedia content like images, audio, and visual files. Both SMS and MMS are sent using cellular networks and thus require a wireless plan and a wireless carrier.